

Project Info

Per week, starting November 12, students will be tasked with a daily journaling assignment designed to help development productive habits of planning and self-reflection. The degree to which each student does this may differ depending on their individual strengths, weaknesses, and goals. However, the mere act of carrying out this task on a regular basis will differentiate them from their peers.

The planning portion of the assignment will not be limited to plans for this class, as it will require students to take note of all the things they have to do on a daily or weekly basis. This is intended to help each student with their own individual time management.

The following assignments will be given and are required to be completed in full by December 13:

- Plan for Assignment Completion (Due Nov. 11)
- 5 Typography Designs
- 3 Vector Graphics
- 2 Holiday Themed Posters
- 10 Content-Aware Filled Images (more assigned due to the easy difficulty level)
- Daily Journal Assignments (33 Total; You might not complete all, but make an honest attempt do so.)

The daily journal assignments must have the following on each page for them to be considered complete:

- Date
- At least three things you intend to complete for the day
- What went well for the day
- What you've completed
- What could have gone better
- What specific things are you personally doing to improve the outcome of your next attempt of the previous items?

The project, itself, is being kept loose in terms of what's required aside from what has been previously mentioned. Keep in mind, we will still have lecture days throughout this time period. I will try to keep them contained to Mondays and Fridays, but I will add in more as I deem necessary.

The main thing to keep in mind throughout this time period is that what you're actively doing is the only thing that will affect the outcome of this project for you. You either fall in line and do what is necessary for the sake of completion, or you never realize how easy I've made this assignment and forever think this is hard work.

More information will be given as is needed or requested. A more appropriate rubric will be given by Friday, Nov. 15.
